Money psychology: Beyond the numbers

It's easy to think that how you approach money is all about formulas, facts and figures. The truth is, the decisions we make are influenced by other forces too—our own biases, life experiences and human nature. We'll explore what some of those forces are and how to tame them for our advantage. You'll learn about:

- Human nature and what shapes our feelings about money
- How those feelings might make us behave
- The importance of the big picture when making decisions
- Doing what's best for your long-term interests

Finance for new grads

Starting out in the job world can be exciting—and overwhelming. The financial foundation you build now can impact your life for years to come. That's why it's so important to understand how to manage your money, create good financial habits and save and invest for the long term. In this webinar you'll get insights on:

- Benefit packages that come with your job
- How a spending plan helps you in the short term
- What a retirement plan does for you in the long term
- Choosing traditional (pretax) versus Roth (after-tax) contributions
- The importance of an emergency fund
